Cenotes - A lifeless space?

We shed our lights on it for you. Be ready for surprises!

Cenotes are access points to a massive underground water system that is slowly flowing out into the ocean. The caves through which this water flows are pitch-dark with no natural light, and so are home to only a few species. But where the cave roof has collapsed and cenotes were formed, light floods in creating a unique habitat for many kinds of fish, plants, turtles, crabs and much more...
